

Day #11 09 June 2016. Got up and had breakfast at a corner café just down the street from the hotel. Then to the parking garage to the car for the trip above, to the Brussels airport. Had to call the parking garage phone number to find out how to get out of the garage.

Got to the airport around 9a and said farewell to the Opel Mokka.
2,461 km = 1,529 miles on this trip

Had a sandwich and a “farewell to Belgium” beer

It's the better part of an hour getting from Keflavik International Airport to downtown Reykjavik.

I guess we missed the more scenic parts of Iceland. Wasn't much to see on the 45 minute bus ride.

Started looking a little more interesting closer to town.

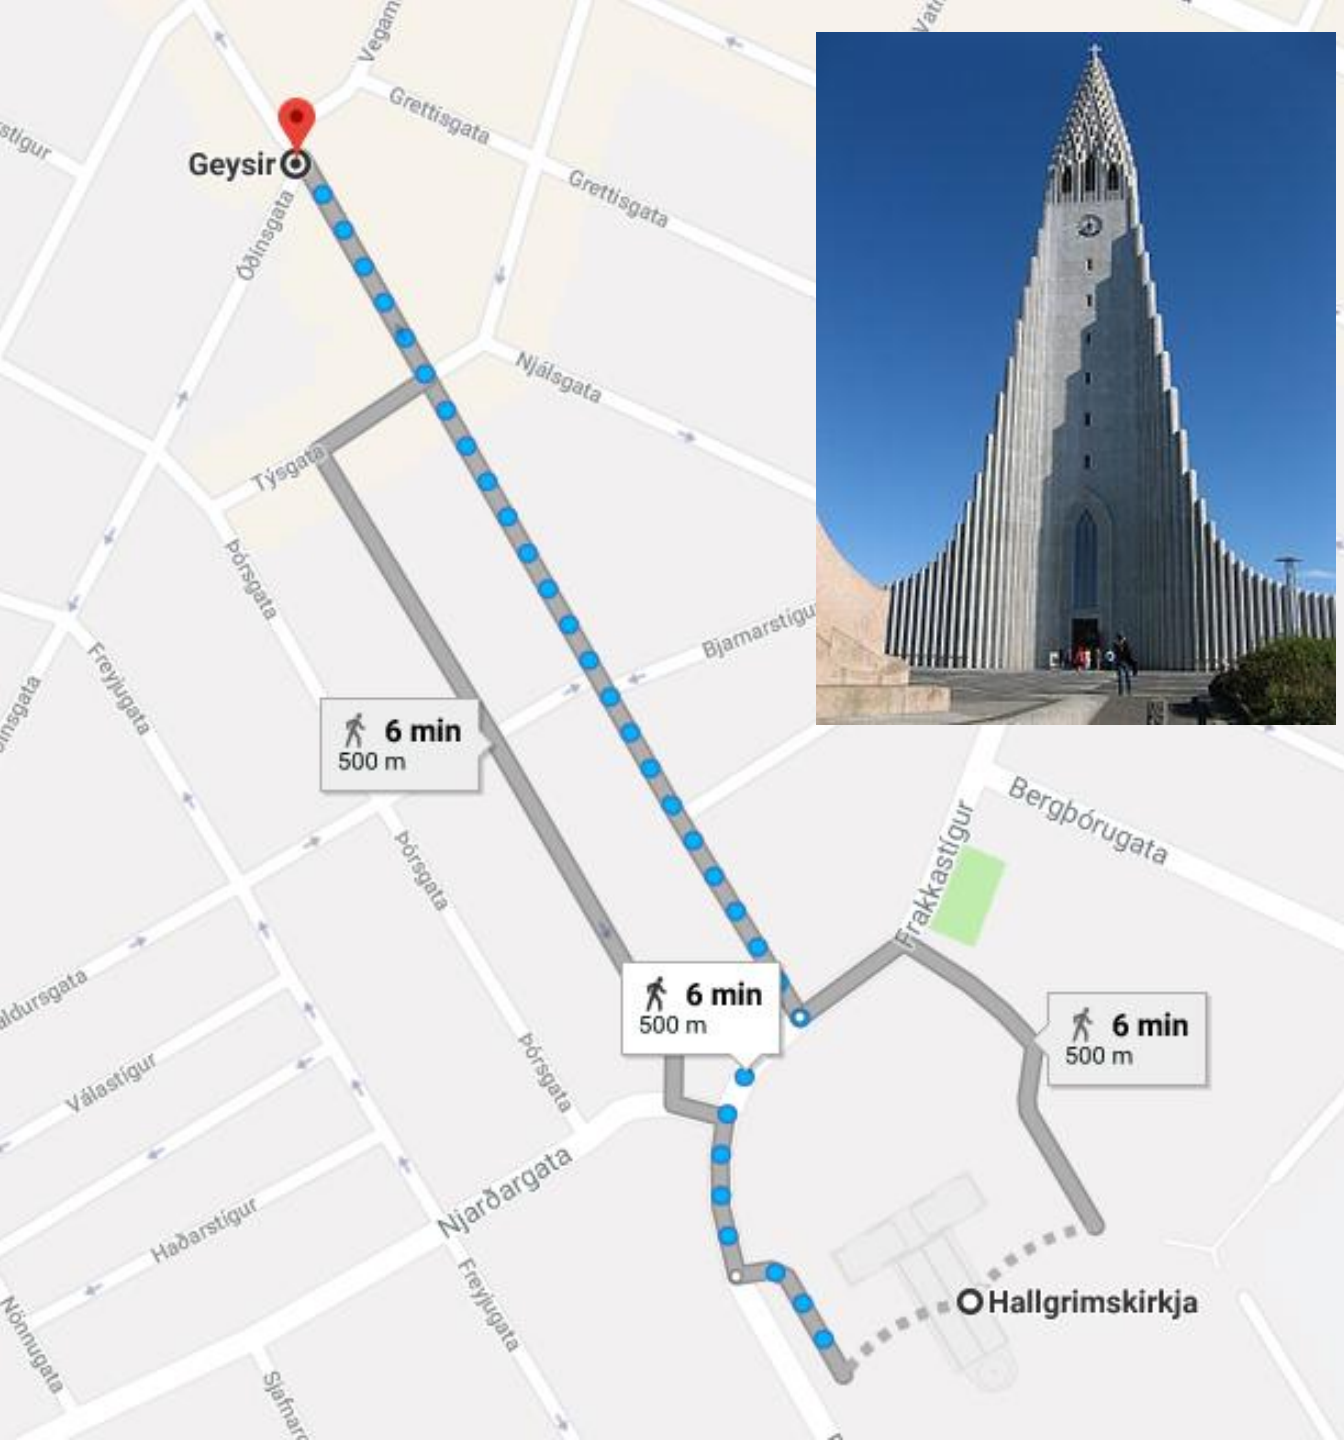

Our lodging was on an upper floor from GEYSIR women's clothing shop.

Quite appropriate to take a selfie
when on an Icelandic tiny elevator.

Just a short walk from our room was the Hallgrimskirkja, the Lutheran church that stands 244' high. The church is named after the Icelandic poet and clergyman Hallgrímur Pétursson (1614–1674). The designer wanted it to resemble the trap rocks, mountains and glaciers of Iceland's landscape. It took 41 years to build. 1945-1986.

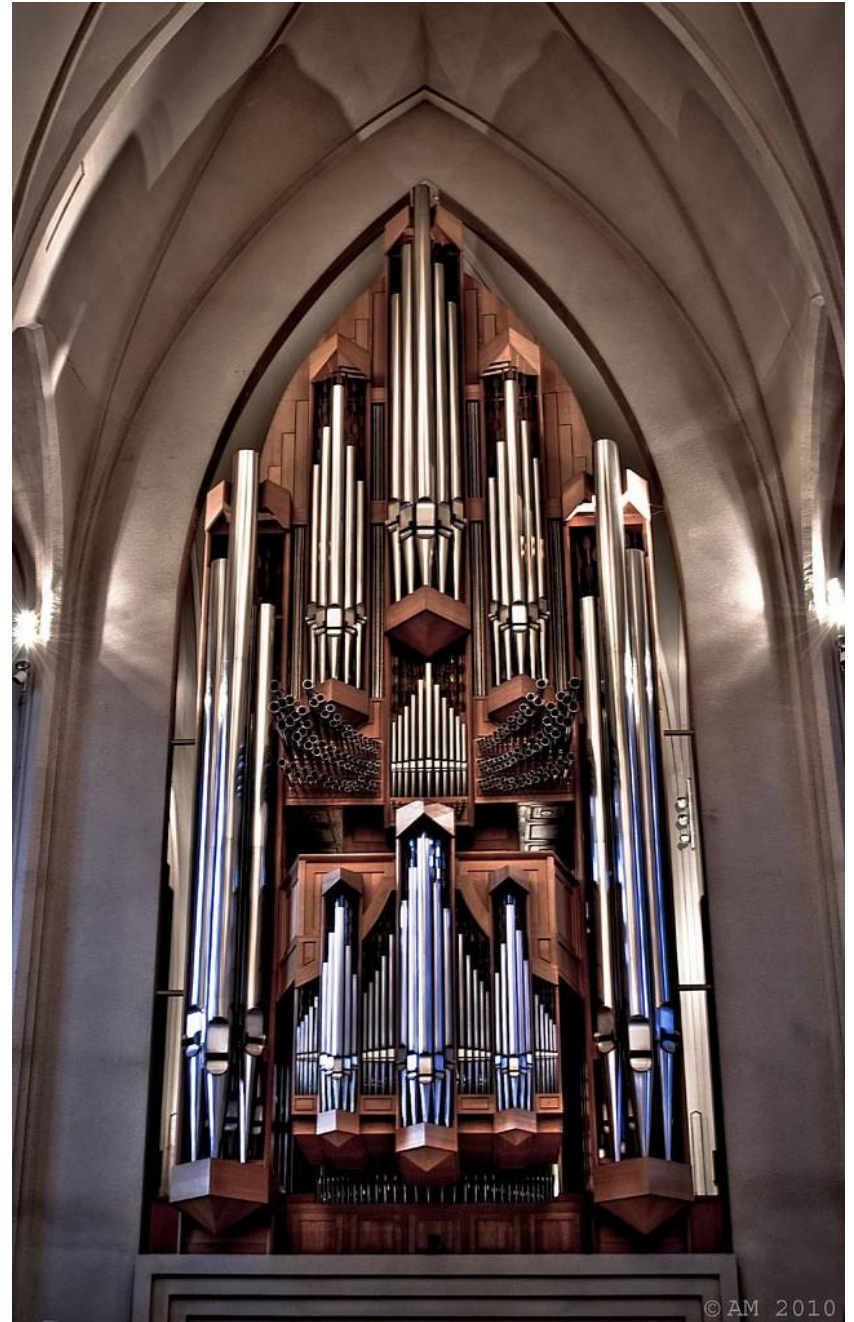

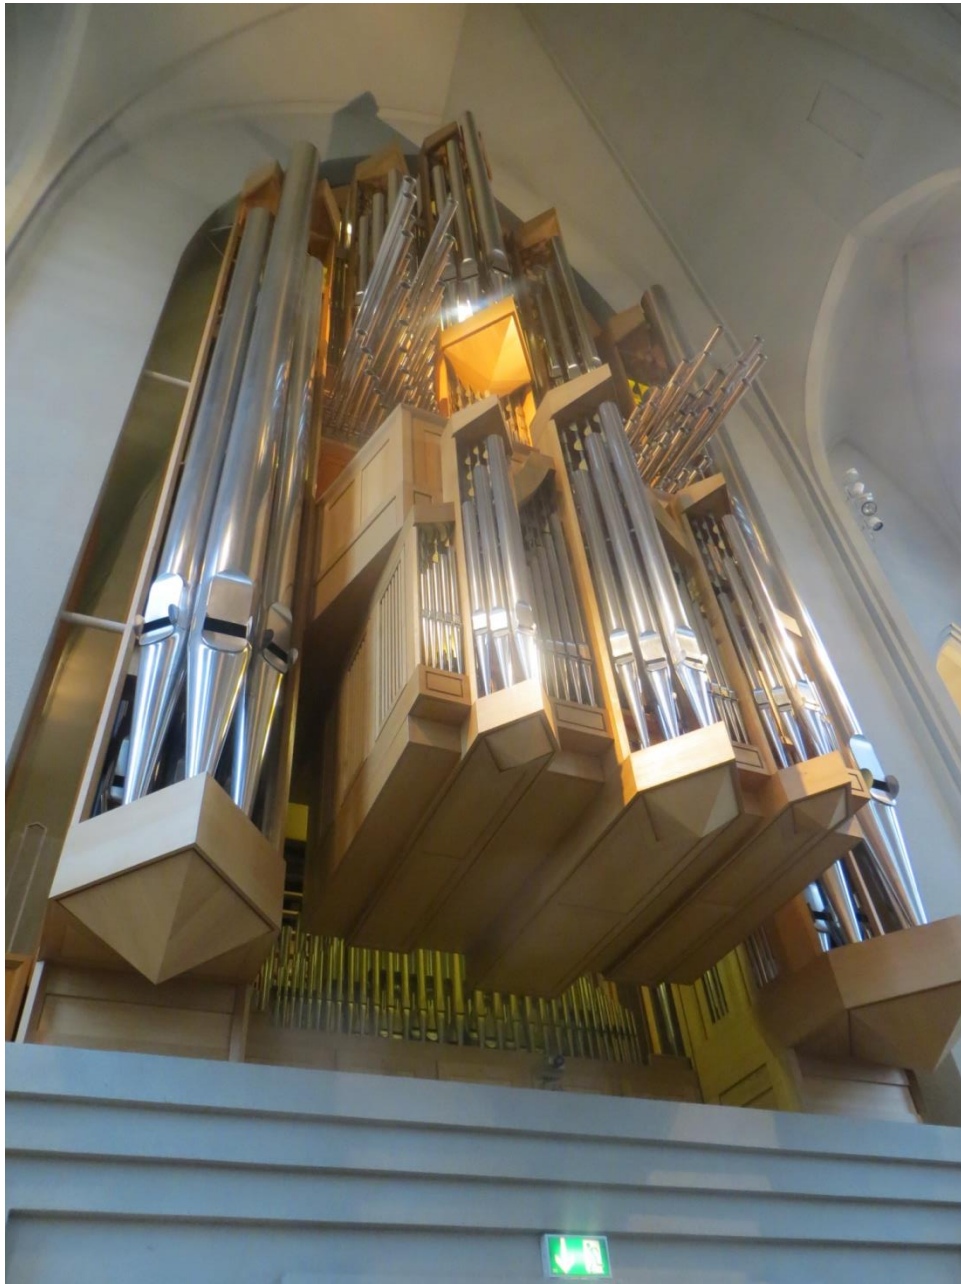

The statue of explorer Leif Eriksson (c. 970 – c. 1020) by Alexander Stirling Calder in front of the church predates its construction. It was a gift from the United States in honor of the 1930 Alþingi Millennial Festival, commemorating the 1000th anniversary of Iceland's parliament at Þingvellir in 930 AD.

Website says: The concert organ is the largest in the country, and organists worldwide take pleasure in playing it and in recording in the church. Inaugurated in December 1992, it was constructed by Johannes Klais Organworks in Bonn, Germany, and has four manuals and a pedal, 72 stops and 5275 pipes. It is 15 m high and weighs 25 tonnes. The largest pipes are 10 m long.

Some interesting places in Reykjavik

This is where we had our official Icelandic beer on the patio and a good meal. Everything in Iceland is EXPENSIVE!

I'm sure there are some stunning vistas like this in Iceland, but we didn't see em.
